

In 2016, we set out to positively impact one million people in the UK and in early 2020 we reached this milestone. The world has changed a lot since 2016 and with the shadow of the COVID-19 pandemic being felt globally, the challenges facing society have never been greater. One of the central effects has been to the economy, resulting in rising levels of unemployment. If we are to tackle this challenge, business has a critical role to play whilst continuing to deliver a positive impact in our local communities.

One way for us to make an impact that matters is to help people to develop skills, preparing them for a world of opportunity. 5 Million Futures is our North and South Europe goal to help five million people overcome barriers to education and employment by 2030 - empowering individuals with the skills they need to succeed.

Connecting for impact

We're not doing this alone, We are working with a network of amazing organisations including 26 schools, 23 charities, 8 social enterprises and a number of third sector strategic partners.

Since 2012, we have supported over 70 social enterprises to have a greater impact in their local communities by providing the time and expertise of our people through volunteering, delivering Deloitte services pro bono, finding ways to connect them into our own business and by promoting their work to our wider networks.
